Mrs. Gibson on Jewel Robbery

ROBBERS ASKED TO RELEASE WILSON TO PROSECUTE AND CAUSE OF WOMEN

Mrs. Preston Gibson, granddaughter of Mrs. James McMillan of Manchester, and who has had active charge of the investigation of the theft of Mrs. McMillan's jewels on the night of August 7, talked today for the first time about the North Shore robbery.

The jewels, she declared, were worth more than $75,000, though that was at first the estimated value. She hinted that the sum involved in the case.

Mrs. Gibson has been living with her grandmother at Eagle Head, the splendid McMillan estate at Manchester, during the summer. Last May she brought suit for divorce. She will shortly go to New York, it is understood, to prepare for the trial of that suit.

Besides the statement by Mrs. Gibson, the first public utterance she has made upon the subject of the robbery, the day's developments were:

WILSON'S DEVELOPMENTS.
The insurance company halted investigation of the robbery and admitted that John J. Hall, attorney for Mrs. McMillan, wished that the matter be dropped for a time.

A strong report was circulated that Mrs. McMillan had received word, where she could find the jewels whenever she wanted them.

The discovery that a professional crackman had been at work in Manchester this summer made it possible he was responsible for the theft of the McMillan gems.

Mrs. Gibson's comment on the mystery was as follows:
"Statements have been made that she was nervous. They will all be straightened out."
The view of the theft was first made known by the man, Mrs. Deady. We were at dinner, and the theft was about that time. Mrs. Deady came down and told us.

There was another theft here about three years ago. It occurred while we were at dinner, at about the same time.

"This is blackmail. I think some ought to be said about the case after what appeared in the newspapers. Manchester and Manchester police are at work. I think they are."

Charles E. Warren, whose trial on the charge of murdering Walter O. Green, the Newton Court restaurant man, opened Monday in East Cambridge. He changed his plea of not guilty to a plea of guilty to second degree murder, and was sentenced to life imprisonment.

The charge of murder followed dramatic scenes. At the opening of court the attorneys were in the courtroom. Later they came to the prisoner's cage and argued with Warren. When they left him he bled into tears. Presently the judge and jury came in and the clerk asked:

"Do you wish to change your plea?"

Warren answered so weakly no one could hear him. His attorney, E. Lewis, stepped to his side and whispered to him for two minutes. Warren then said:

"I plead guilty to murder in the second degree."

And then his voice broke. He was then led to the judge and dropped in his seat. He was weeping freely. Warren then said:

"I plead guilty to murder in the second degree."

ATHENS, Oct. 6.—Premier Venizelos announced in the Chamber of Deputies today that the Cabinet had resigned owing to differences between King Constantine and the ministry. The sittings of the Chamber were then suspended.

The King has openly defied the allies, who have landed a large force on Crete, and "to all Serbia," notwithstanding King Constantine's protests.

Venizelos explained that the cabinet had found it impossible to alter the program agreed upon, even to meet the wishes of the throne, and that the resignation of the ministers was therefore necessary.

King Constantine accepted the resignation of Premier Venizelos and the cabinet.

The former Premier, in a statement, says:

"The resignation of the cabinet was inevitable owing to the impossibility of reconciling my interpretation of the Greek-Serbian treaty obligations with that of King Constantine."

Rumanian troops are reported to have been sent to the Bulgarian frontier.

WIFE DEFENDS FIDELITY OF HARVARD EMERY, SUE FOR $80,000

Mrs. Mary E. Emery of Boston and Brookline has filed an attachment for $80,000 on the property of John A. Emery of No. 148 St. Botolph street, naming six Boston banks as trustees to the action. Mrs. Emery is about seventy years old and widow of John A. Emery, who died in 1907 at Boston's first railway. He retired from the contracting and building business about ten years ago.

The attachment is said to be preliminary to a suit for alleged breach of promise to marry. Emery had been married to Mrs. French for six years, according to Winifred H. Patterson, her attorney.

Mrs. Emery is away with the Anselm in Virginia. His wife, when interviewed, said: "I was married a year ago as the first of September to Mr. Emery, after we had kept company steadily for more than six years. I have known him for more than eight years. I don't know where she is going to get it, but she has 'got that much money. And as for attaching his accounts in the six banks, that is a shot in the dark, for he hasn't a cent in any one of them, so far as I know."

Jesse Pomeroy Says State Is Unfair to Him

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 6.—George Truglio and Thomas Shea, injured men aboard the destroyer Cummings, maintained their injuries in heroic attempt to save the destroyer from destruction, it becomes known today.

Truglio, whose home is at Jamestown, N. H., was lying in bed when he lives in Paterson, N. J., is in a critical condition.

Medals of honor will be recommended for both Truglio and Shea. When the explosion occurred—about 10:30 a. m.—he believed, of excessive pressure in an oil tube—the two men deliberately ran into the flames from the blowing oil and shut off the valves.

Truglio cut out the supply of oil

"I have served thirty-nine long years, most of that time in solitary confinement."

Bishop Robert Codman of Maine, who was operated on at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital a few days ago for a paralytic condition, is still unconscious and his condition is critical, it was announced at the hospital today.

FIRST LINER ON CANAL RUN TO NEW YORK

The freight steamer H. P. Dimmock last night passed through the Cape Cod Canal the first time to make the short cut under a new contract between the Eastern Steamship Company and the Cape Cod Canal Company. Hereafter all the Eastern Steamship freighters will pass through the canal, and next summer the passenger ships of the company will probably use the canal on their way to and from New York.

The contract between the two companies is of great importance, as it is the first for regular canal service by any maritime company. The cut through the canal eliminates twenty miles of the most dangerous waters along the Atlantic coast from Boston to New York trip, and also means a time gain of from an hour and a half to two hours. Dimmock will come through the canal from New York, and tomorrow the Dimmock returns to Boston from New York through the canal. Captain Austin of the Eastern Steamship Company today announced that he had received word that the Dimmock had taken about an hour and a half in passing through the entire length of the canal and well out into Buzzards Bay. President Austin said the company's own pilot, would guide the steamer through the canal as soon as they became acquainted with the new waterway.

Accepted Dial From Harvard '18 Class

President Lowell of Harvard today, in behalf of the University, accepted the marble and-dial pedestal from the class of 1915. William J. Murray, president of the class, made the presentation. The exercises were held in the triangle between Smith and Stanish Halls. Dean Thompson was among the speakers. George A. Perry of Arlington led the ambassadors in cheer-ing. The Freshman class was piloted by Edward L. Casey of Natick.

ARMS MAKERS TAKE HALF THE WAR LOAN

By International News Service.
NEW YORK, Oct. 5.—The formal contract binding the 1,000,000 war loan secured by the allies in the United States is expected to be signed this week, although the bonds making up the loan have already been subscribed. The contract is now being examined by the legal representatives of J. P. Morgan & Co.

Six subscriptions from contractors for war supplies for France and Great Britain account for $100,000,000 of the loan, and it is said half the $1,000,000,000 has been taken by munition makers.

The largest subscription was that of $10,000,000 by the Ins. Trust interests.

The second largest was for $10,000,000, and came from the Bethlehem Steel interests.

The third was for $10,000,000, and was accredited to the Westinghouse interests, which have $10,000,000 in contracts.

LOAN OVER-SUBSCRIBED.
It is said the loan was over-subscribed by about thirty-five interest groups, but Morgan & Co. have given out no information as to over-subscriptions.

"The subscription was for $100,000,000. That is the amount of the loan, and that has been subscribed," said a representative of J. P. Morgan & Co. "The rest will be made public giving the amount of the applications."

The total sum, $1,000,000,000 could have been raised, as originally planned.

"No, I do not now. A loan of this character is not in the United States. We did not have time to submit the plan to the public."

SMALL PART FOR PUBLIC.
Estimates of the amount the small investor will be asked to absorb vary from $15,000,000 to $100,000,000.

It was pointed out that those who get in on the ground floor have a security against the possibility of a drop in the price of the bonds. The conjecture is that the bonds will be sold to a large extent by underwriters as a permanent investment.

Some of the financial groups which subscribed to the loan for the purpose of reading the bonds to the public are now preparing to put them on the market.

A dispatch from Paris says that a measure pending before the House of Representatives will be introduced in the Chamber of Deputies tomorrow.

It will meet in special session on October 11 for the same purpose.

Charles Frohman's Biography in Cosmopolitan Magazine

The Biggest Lesson of His Life Is Told in Nine Words

Copyright, 1915, by The Star Company.

(Reproduced by Permission from Cosmopolitan Magazine)

This is me when I was poor

CHARLES FROHMAN, THE GREAT MANAGER, WRITING ON THIS PICTURE, TAKEN IN HIS YOUTH, "THIS IS ME WHEN I WAS POOR AND HAPPY."

Charles Frohman worked hard, lived usefully, died a plucky death and left ten thousand good examples for others who have still to struggle up from nothing to success as he did.

In Cosmopolitan Magazine Daniel Frohman, brother of Charles Frohman, presents his brother's biography.

It will be read by the million families into which Cosmopolitan Magazine goes each month. It ought to be read by EVERY young man who wants to succeed and who should know what success costs, and how it is achieved.

The story of Charles Frohman's life, a story of the American theatre, is an intensely dramatic story of energy and resourcefulness struggling to the top.

When he began Frohman had nothing. Every foot of the way he had to fight. When he died he was rich and knew everybody. Everybody liked him; he had everything that he wanted; yet he wrote on this picture of his young manhood, "This is me when I was POOR and HAPPY."

In these few words are contained the biggest secret in the life of Frohman, which will be continued for several months in Cosmopolitan Magazine.

A man struggles, achieves, accumulates. And at the end he discovers that it is work that gives happiness, not the accumulation.

Thousands of rich Americans own their time, own great bank accounts, and as they sit idle look with envy—not at others who may have more, but at their boyhood, back to the days that seemed so mean.

Frohman was truly generous, useful and, in power and accomplishment, a great man.

He gave opportunity to all of those that worked for him.

Far from trying to sink his personality in his own and take credit for their work, he belittled his own personality and magnified theirs. Actors whom all the world knew were unknown until Frohman began to manage them.

Writers leading in their profession owe their lead to Frohman, to the success which his genius gave to their work.

He had the satisfaction of success wherever he sought it.

What he did succeeded, and he SAW the success following the hard work.

He accumulated a great deal of money, but found that it had no value except to be used in new work and fresh enterprises.

Read the biography prepared by Daniel Frohman in Cosmopolitan Magazine. It emphasizes these facts.

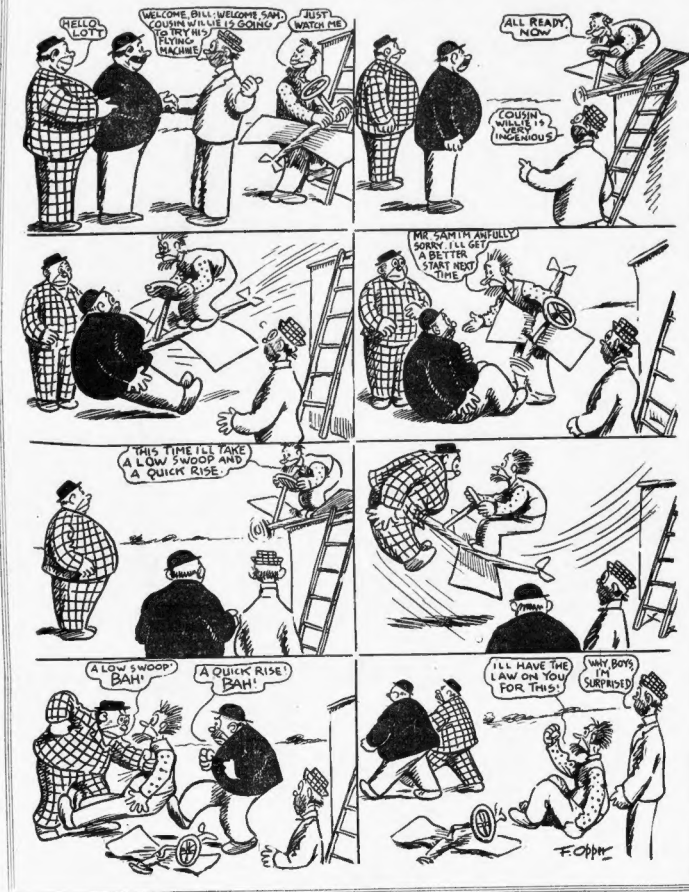

Man is put here to work. And he is built and wound up in such a way that he MUST WORK OR SUFFER.

Frohman writes on his photograph, "This is me when I was poor and happy," and he writes the truth. For when he was poor he was working his hardest and, THEREFORE, enjoying the greatest happiness.

The Pleasure of Knowing the Stars

By Garrett P. Serviss

DEVOTION to astronomy, the most inspiring of the sciences, often begins through an acquaintance, casually made, with some conspicuous and brilliant constellation, or some relatively bright and beautiful star. Many men and women have been led to the lifelong delight of knowing the stars by having Orion, or the Great Bear, or Sirius, or Capella pointed out to them, in connection with those names recall. There is another side of astronomy which is only for those endowed with scientific tastes and abilities, but the "geography of the heavens" is for everybody, and, frequently, it serves as introduction to the entire subject, in all its aspects. Even if astronomy consisted only of a knowledge of the starry heavens as they show themselves to the naked eye, and of the tapestried history of the thoughts, dreams and heroic legends of early nations which mythology has woven among the stars, it would furnish one of the noblest occupations for human intelligence. Look up at the sky tonight, and see how it is studded with pictures marked out there by man's imagination long before human name the "fixed" star's marks on the face of the earth become obliterated by the passage of time, but not so in the sky. There they remain as bright today as when they were created. The glittering figures of the great heroes and heroines of the demigods, the dragons and the monsters of Greek and Mesopotamian mythology whine slightly overhead as the earth spins round, just as they have been doing for countless centuries.

The constellations are the most lasting of all man's works. They are the only truly enduring monuments.

We are not put on this earth to do what we want to do, but to carry out the will of the power that sends us. We are put here to make the earth and the human race to which it belongs what both ought to be.

We are here to make a better planet and a better race, to improve the race, irrigate the deserts, dig the canals, build the railroads, make and enforce good laws. We are working machines, and it is while we work that we are happy.

Poverty is no punishment if real work goes with it. And wealth is no happiness unless real work continues after the wealth is accumulated.

What you DO, not what you HAVE, makes life worth while.

ments that he has ever made in memory of his ideal. Books and pyramids perish, but the constellations remain, and some all-embracing world-remembrance mysteriously preserves their original significance through the flood of change continually sweeping over the earth.

It is marvelous how the images of the antique world continue to be reflected up into the horizon of ages so remote that when they were on the meridian of time recorded history had yet not begun. Take for instance the stars known as Castor and Pollux, the leaders of the constellation Gemini, the "Twins." The Castor and Pollux of mythological history were the brothers of Helen, the faithless queen of Sparta, whose flight from her husband, Menelaus, and elopement with Paris to Troy were the cause of the Trojan War, a war to which no historian can assign a date. While the long war continued Castor and Pollux died, and a constellation was formed in their honor, and their names were attached to its two brightest stars. Now, note how deeply sunk all this is in the dark backward and dim of time.

In the drama of "The Trojan Women," written by Euripides more than 400 years before the birth of Christ, you will find the following most interesting reference to the twin stars of the Spartan brothers, which shone that even in the days of Euripides the constellation Gemini was of unmeasured antiquity: "Troy has been captured; Hector, the widowed queen of King Priam, who was killed, together with his son Hector, by the terrible Achilles, bewails her fate (she was doomed to be carried off as a slave by the wily and hated Ulysses), and then, with burning indignation, turns to denounce the faithfulness of Helen, who has just proclaimed that she was an unwilling follower of her paramour, Paris, Hector's unworthy brother. "Hail," exclaims Hecuba, "my son carried thee off by force, thou sayest. What Spartan saw this? What cry for help didst thou ever raise?—though Castor was still alive, a vigorous youth, and his brother also, not yet amid the stars!"

Who does not feel the added charm that attaches to those stars from the knowledge that Euripides and his contemporaries knew them by the same names that they bear today, and that through the great old period of Greek history, during the centuries when Greece illuminated human annals for all time with her galaxy of genius, every Greek child read the story of Castor and Pollux, written with stars on the spangled zones of the Milky Way.

At this season of the year the stars of the "One Twin Brothers" are low down in the western evening sky, but overhead, and all around the visible firmament, there are other storied stars and constellations, any one of which will serve to recall the age-old association of man's thoughts and fancies with the celestial banners above. Mr. Barritt's monthly sky-map will tell you what to look for at any time.

Why Men Sympathize with Women Criminals

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1915, by The Star Company.

"WHY is it," asks a friend of mine, "that judges and jurors almost invariably endeavor to acquit a woman criminal and endeavor, with just as much persistence, to convict a man accused of crime? A lawyer defending a woman lays great stress upon the fact that the jurors have mothers and sisters. But have they not also fathers and brothers?"

"Why is a woman who deceives several men admirers less reprehensible in the eyes of the law than a lawyer defending a woman lays great stress upon the fact that the jurors have mothers and sisters. But have they not also fathers and brothers?"

It is not necessary to look far to find the explanation of man's mental attitude in such cases. My questioner (who seems from his penmanship to be a man) ought to look in his own heart for the answer. Man, since the beginning of history up to the last quarter of the last century, has been woman's ruler, teacher, guide, mentor and critic.

It is he who has laid down the moral code for her, and it is he who has taught her to consider him her superior in all things and all vocations, save that of child bearing.

It has been man's greatest mental recreation to muse on the inferior, clinging and helpless quality of woman. The last quarter of a century, the last half of a century, in truth, has disturbed him somewhat in these reveries, but he still regards her with that protective and paternal feeling which is the result of misapprehension and acquired habits of thought.

Added to this he has the indelible stains before his eyes of the physical handiwork which Nature put upon woman.

When woman is behaving herself, when she is ruling society and the home, and even interfering in man's domain in business, he for the time forgets her weaknesses, her helplessness and her handiwork becomes her tempter and her critic. But when she is in trouble, the trouble that menaces reputation and life, he recalls all these conditions and is again her protector and defender.

However appearances and circumstantial evidence may be against her, he knows in his deepest heart that as a rule some man first took the woman's hand and led her toward the path of folly—that oftentimes tower-bidden avenue to the dark road of crime.

It is the egotism, the vanity, the pity and the reverence in man's nature all combined which makes him so much more sympathetic toward a woman criminal than toward a sinner of his own sex.

It is quite true that were the life of many an immoral woman at stake it would be found that she made the first advances to her victim. There are women libertines and moral outlaws in the world.

Yet even then a just judge or jury realizes that the man knew what he was about when he responded to her advances, and that he had less to sacrifice in the eyes of the world than the woman. Being the stronger, fortified by nature and the laws of society, it behooved him to try to put her in the path of rectitude.

If man would show the same spirit toward woman at all times which they exhibit on the judge's bench and in the jurors' box few women criminals would be brought before them.

Hundreds of men forget that they have mothers and sisters when they tempt innocent women acquaintances and employes into folly, but they remember the relationship of the hardened criminal to their dear ones.

It is a peculiar fact that while man will do all in his power to defend a woman of blemished reputation when her life is in danger, he will object to having the good women of his family champion her cause.

They may express sympathy, but they must not give personal strength or consolation.

Woman is rapidly pushing herself to a position where man will regard her with less consideration in her time of trial. This fact is already shown in public conveyances, where he is no longer solicitous for her comfort and health.

One man gives a woman a seat now in a crowded vehicle where one hundred years ago the day will come, I doubt not, when the partiality of which my questioner complains will no longer exist.

More Truth Than Poetry

The Wonderful Genius of Shakespeare

MY Shakespeare lessons taught me that Verona was the place where Romeo first gazed upon young Juliet's lovely face. But I was wrong about the town, for in a movie play I saw the tragic lovers met in Hackensack, N. J.

KING Richard Third, I gathered from the self-same erring source, at Bosworth offered valiantly fair prices for a horse. But now that I have seen him in a moving picture show, I know it wasn't Bosworth, but a field near Tuckahoe.

I USED to fancy it was Rome where Brutus' black hand band conspired to frame J. Caesar and to kill him out of hand. But in the movie play I saw they met just after dark behind an up-to-date garage just outside Franklin Park.

OLD Shakespeare was a marvel, for every single play he picked out old familiar scenes around the U. S. A. Of course he never saw the place, but with a genius rare he pictured them as if he'd spent his early boyhood there.

ORLANDO had his wrestling match in Douglass, L. I. To Richard Harding Davis' poem King Lear crept off to die, And when, a prey to jealous rage, the great Othello fell, He lit in Eddie Foy's front yard, on Main street, New Rochelle!

They Certainly Would Help The troops with the Doos when million dollars' worth of boots in this country. The seven league, sort?

Taxpayers need not worry about the untold increase in valuation. There's been a considerable increase in value to make for it.

It Couldn't Be Done
The troops with the Doos was that he tried to keep both ears to the ground and both eyes on the Presidential chair at the same time. What Was the Matter with Them?
Japan, it is officially announced, has turned over to Australia the island that she took from Germany.
